Father Claude Heithaus, S.J., professor of Archeology and Classics, is best known for his work as an activist for racial equality in Saint Louis and his contribution to desegregation efforts at Saint Louis University in the 1940s. Heithaus was born in Saint Louis on May 28, 1898. He attended Saint Louis University where he earned his Bachelor of Arts in Philosophy in 1920. His undergraduate studies were briefly interrupted when he volunteered for service during the First World War. Heithaus finished his U.S. Army career with the rank of 2nd Lieutenant.

In 1920, Heithaus entered the Saint Stanislaus Jesuit Novitiate in Florissant, Missouri, and after his two-year novitiate, was placed on the faculty for a year as an instructor of Latin and Greek. From 1925 to 1928, Heithaus served as both the acting head of the Department of Classical Languages and the director of public relations at the University of Detroit. In 1928, Heithaus resumed his studies in Theology at Saint Louis University and was ordained into the priesthood in 1930.

In 1933, Heithaus was given the opportunity to study classical art and archaeology at University College London where he received his PhD in 1940. During his years in Europe, Heithaus traveled extensively throughout Europe photographing the classical collections of the continent's greatest museums. As part of his doctoral thesis, Heithaus made expeditions to Syria and Lebanon where he studied the remains of ancient temples.

Heithaus returned to Saint Louis in 1940, where he taught Classical Art and Archaeology at Saint Louis University. In addition to his teaching duties, Heithaus served as the director of university publications and publicity, and used his position to publicly press for the admission of African-American students to the university.

In 1944, he delivered a sermon to five-hundred students at Saint Francis Xavier (College) Church that declared that prejudice and discrimination against African-Americans were un-Christian aberrations. He induced the congregation to stand up and recite a pledge repudiating racial prejudice and promising to cooperate in whatever efforts would be made to bring about racial integration at Saint Louis University.

The fallout caused by this sermon resulted in Heithaus' transfer away from Saint Louis in 1945. He was first sent to Fort Riley, Kansas where he served as a military chaplain, and then to Marquette University in Milwaukee, Wisconsin where he joined the Department of Classical Languages. While in Milwaukee, he continued his work promoting interracial justice by serving on the Milwaukee Commission on Human Rights.

Heithaus finally returned to Saint Louis University in 1958. In addition to returning to his teaching post, he worked to establish the Museum of Western Jesuit Missions.

Claude Heithaus died on My 12, 1976.
